2. We got a tour of the brand new building from Amanda. She explained that there are four floors, one is a closed unit for mentally disgruntled (and resultingly unpredictable) people, one for amputees, and one for surgery recovery, although there is mixing between floors. The units are state of the art with lounge on each of the corners some with sunrooms so the patients can get some fresh air. We later got to see some of the products that Good Shepard has had a part in developing, as well as some others they endorse. There were items ranging from helpful eating aides, to learning aides that read text aloud for users. There was also an ai integrated assistant that generated paintings and told bedtime stories to the user!

3. One thing that connected to my current learning experiences was the use of 3D printing to on-site build products that aid mobility, recovery, and learning in patients and students.

4. One specific way the information I learned can be applied to my future career is as a reminder that innovation is useful across disciplines.
